In order to bridge from my previous career, which had me spinning my tires in a ditch on the side of the road, to a very buoyant career in the tech industry, I will come across many roadblocks and construction zones to slow me down. But as long as I stay persistent, manage my time, make goals, and remember what is important to me, I will always float to the top.

I plan on starting by finding a job as a junior developer or a paid intern at a local tech company. I have backing from Techhire NM, so I believe I'm already enrolled in the intern assistance program they have to encourage employers to take on interns. After my junior developer experience is gained, I would like to move on to native app development, and VR, through further education and relevant experience.
